Postdoctoral FNS Researcher at UNIL

The successful candidate will work within the research project “How to evaluate objections to political compromises and their rebuttals.” In its first part, the project will provide a systematic mapping of the objections against political compromises developed by 20th and 21st century scholars within the field of political theory. In the second part, the research will evaluate the robustness of the objections towards political compromises and their rebuttals. This evaluation will be conducted in considering normative and empirical strengths of the inventoried objections and rebuttals and should contribute to a theory of the role of compromise in democratic decision-making.

This project is conceived as a collaborative undertaking between the principal investigator (Prof. Sandrine Baume) and the post-doc to be recruited. The principal investigator and post-doc will share the research effort and produce both individual and joint publications.
